

First Look At Thompson Seattle Hotel Opening Summer 2016

David Hochman
Mar 3, 2016

Exterior of Thompson Hotels' first entry into the Pacific Northwest. Steps from the Seattle's Pike's Place Market and overlooking Puget Sound, the property will have 158 guest rooms and 10 suites--oh, and a swank rooftop bar, of course.

Sleek and chic, meet Microsoft MSFT +0.89% geeks. Thompson Hotels, a luxury hospitality brand synonymous with buzzy sophistication, is set to open its first property in the Pacific Northwest this summer. The first sneak-peek renderings pop like a triple-shot caramel macchiato after nine days of rain.

Rendering of an exterior room view at Seattle's Thompson Hotel, set to open on Puget Sound in the heart of the city this summer.

Located steps from Pike's Place Market with views to Puget Sound and Mt. Rainier, Thompson Seattle brings a dash of cool to the area where Starbucks SBUX +0.71% first started, and where tourists risk getting soaked by Pike's Place's famous "flying fish."

Thompson Seattle will feature 158 rooms and guest suites, a 3,500-square-foot rooftop bar and lounge, and a culinary program overseen by town favorite Josh Henderson (who runs Vestal and other Seattle restaurants) of the Huxley Wallace Collective.

Mid-century modern meets Microsoft and Starbucks. The 158 guestrooms and 10 suites are built to feel like residences. Those floor-to-ceiling windows are built to feel the Seattle sun on those days when it's shining.

Food and beverage operations will be looked after by Executive Chef Josh Henderson and Huxley Wallace Collective.

Pet friendly, highly caffeinated, comfortable but ready for business -- Thompson Hotels is totally going Seattle this summer.

A rendering of the lobby staircase at the new Thompson Seattle, opening this summer.